

The SOUTH-CAROLINA Gazette.

CHARLES-TOWN.

Yesterday arrived here the Friendship, Capt. Coats, in 6 Weeks from Bristol, by whom we have

His MAJESTY's most gracious SPEECH to both Houses of Parliament, on the 13th of Nov. 1755.

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

THE present critical conjuncture of affairs, and my constant inclination to have the advice and assistance of my parliament on all important occasions, have made me desirous to meet you here as early as possible.

Since your last session, I have taken such measures as might be most conducive to the protection of our possessions in America, and to the regaining of such parts thereof, as had been incroached upon, or invaded, in violation of the peace, and contrary to the faith of the most solemn treaties.

For this purpose, the maritime force of this kingdom has been got ready with the utmost application and expedition, and been principally employed; some land forces have been sent from hence to North-America; and all proper encouragement has been given to the several colonies there, to exert themselves in their own defence, and in the maintenance of the rights and possessions of Great Britain.

With a sincere desire to preserve my people from the calamities of war, as well as to prevent, in the midst of these troubles, a general war from being kindled up in Europe, I have been always ready to accept reasonable and honourable terms of accommodation; but none such have hitherto been proposed on the part of France. I have also confined my views and operations to hinder France from making new encroachments, or supporting those already made; to exert our right to a satisfaction for hostilities committed in a time of profound peace; and to disappoint such designs, as, from secret approaches and preparations, there is reason to think, have been formed against my kingdoms and dominions.

By these methods, I have pursued the plan which I formerly pointed out to you, and for which I had the satisfaction to receive the strongest assurances of your vigorous support.

What other power can object to proceedings so absolutely necessary to our own defence and security? My good brother, the king of Spain, sees with concern these differences; and the part which he generously takes in the common welfare of Europe, makes him carefully with the preservation of the public tranquillity. He has also given assurances, that he will continue in the same pacific sentiments.

In pursuing these great ends, I make no doubt of the vigorous and cheerful support of my parliament; and that, whilst I am engaged in this just and national cause, the affectionate assurances which they gave me the last session, will be effectually made good. In consequence thereof, I have greatly increased my naval armaments; augmented my land forces in such a manner as might be the least burthensome; and have concluded a treaty with the empress of Russia, and another with the landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, which shall be laid before you.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I have ordered the proper officers to lay before you estimates for the services of the ensuing year, and likewise accounts of the extraordinary expences which have been made this year, in pursuance of the power given me by parliament. I see, with great content, that the necessary services before mentioned will require large supplies. I ask only such as shall be requisite for the effectual carrying on of those measures which shall be necessary to support what has been begun, according to your inclination, for the security of my kingdoms and dominions, and for the purposes which have been already mentioned to you. Whatever you grant, shall, with the strictest economy, be applied to those uses only for which it shall be given.

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

I rely upon your duty and good affections, which have been often experienced. There never was a situation in which my honour, and the interest of Great Britain, called more strongly for your assistance, and dispatch.

The Humble ADDRESS of the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled; presented to His Majesty Nov. 13th. 1755.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the lords spiritual and temporal, in parliament assembled, humbly beg leave to return your majesty our most grateful thanks for your most gracious speech from the throne.

Your majesty's paternal regard for the welfare and prosperity of your people, which has been so conspicuous on all occasions, has, in this critical conjuncture, been demonstrated by your majesty's earnest desire to preserve them from the calamities of war, and by your royal firmness, in not yielding to any terms of accommodation that were not reasonable and honourable.

When we consider the high importance of the British possessions and rights in America, to the commerce and well-being of these kingdoms, we cannot but reflect with concern, as well as resentment, that, in a time of full peace, and contrary to the faith of the most solemn treaties, so many encroachments should have been committed on the part of France. Nothing can exceed our surprise at such a conduct, but our gratitude to your majesty, for so powerfully exerting your royal care to protect your colonies from such invasions and insults, and to redress those encroachments, which had been so unjustly made.

If any power could be so much mistaken, as to imagine that your majesty, or your parliament, would remain inactive spectators of such unprovoked hostilities, they must before now have been convinced of their error.

We thankfully acknowledge your majesty's wisdom and goodness, in increasing your maritime armaments with so great application and expedition, and in augmenting your land forces with so much regard to the ease of your people, whilst you were providing for their safety; and in having at the same time, generously given encouragement to that great body of your majesty's brave and faithful subjects, with which your American provinces happily abound, to exert their strength on this occasion, as their duty, interest, and common danger oblige, and strongly call upon them to do.

Your majesty has sufficiently shewn, that no motives of ambition, or of fomenting new troubles, have been the grounds of your conduct. Your prudence and magnanimity have been manifested to all the world, by your evident disposition to prevent a general war from breaking out in Europe, and by confining your views and operations to those salutary and necessary ends, which your majesty has been graciously pleased to declare to us.

It is with pleasure we observe the pacific declarations of his Catholic majesty, which are so agreeable to the amity and good correspondence subsisting between the two crowns, and to the general welfare of Europe.

We should fall short of that duty which we owe to your majesty and our country, if we did not, with the greatest sincerity and cheerfulness, promise your majesty our most zealous concurrence and assistance in this just and national cause. Nothing shall be wanting, on our part, to make good those solemn assurances which were given to your majesty by your parliament in their last session. We look upon ourselves as obliged by the strongest ties of duty, gratitude, and honour, to stand by and support your majesty in all such wise and necessary measures and engagements, as your majesty may have taken in vindication of the rights of your crown; or to defeat any attempt which may be made by France, in resentment for such measures; and to assist your majesty in disappointing or repelling all such enterprises as may be formed, not only against your kingdoms, but also against any other of your dominions, although not belonging to the crown of Great Britain, in case they should be attacked on account of the part which your majesty has taken for maintaining the essential liberties of your kingdom.

Animated with these great and interesting considerations, we beg leave, from the bottom of our hearts, to assure your majesty of our inviolable duty.

fection to your sacred person; and that we look upon the preservation of your majesty's government, and of the Protestant succession in your royal house, as the only security, under God, of our religion and liberties. If there are any who have vainly flattered themselves, that menacing appearances or preparations could deter us from faithfully and vigorously setting up to these principles, our unshaken conduct shall demonstrate how much they have been deceived; and that, though we are far from desiring to injure or molest any of our neighbours, we are ready to sacrifice our lives and fortunes in the defence of your majesty, and of the possessions, commerce, and just rights of Great-Britain.

His MAJESTY's most gracious Answer.

My Lords.

I Give you my hearty thanks for this very dutiful and affectionate address. I see, with the greatest satisfaction, the zeal you express for my person and government, and for the true interest of your country, which I am determined to adhere to. The assurances you give me for the defence of my territories abroad, are a strong proof of your affection to me, and a regard for my honour. Nothing shall divert me from pursuing those measures, which may effectually maintain the possessions and rights of my kingdoms, and procure reasonable and honourable terms of accommodation.

The Humble ADDRESS of the House of Commons, to the King.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE your majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the commons of Great Britain, in parliament assembled, beg leave to return your majesty our humble thanks for your most gracious speech from the throne; and to congratulate your majesty upon your safe and happy return into these Kingdoms.

With hearts full of gratitude we offer to your majesty our dutiful acknowledgements for your paternal care and endeavours to preserve to your people, the blessings of peace; and when terms consistent with the true interest of this kingdom could not be obtained, for the great expedition, with which your majesty caused your naval force to be got ready; and the magnanimity and resolution your majesty has shown, at the hazard of all events, to defend the British dominions in America, not only encroached upon, but openly attacked, by the French, in a time of full peace, and further threatened and endangered by a large embarkation of troops from Europe.

We are truly sensible of your majesty's great wisdom and moderation, in being detoured, though so highly provoked, to listen to a reasonable Accommodation; and in endeavouring to avoid the calamities of a general war, by confining your operations to measures necessary for defence; a conduct, which must demonstrate to the other powers of Europe, the uprightness of your majesty's intentions, and convince them, that your majesty is not the aggressor.

The king of Spain's generous concern for the common welfare of Europe, and the assurances he has given your majesty of his desire to preserve the public tranquillity, give us the greatest satisfaction.

We beg leave to assure your majesty, that your dutiful and faithful commons will vigorously and cheerfully support your majesty, in all such wise and necessary measures and engagements, as your majesty may have taken to vindicate the just rights and possessions of your crown, and to guard against any attempts which France may make, on account of your majesty's not having submitted to her unjustifiable encroachments; and that we think ourselves bound in justice and gratitude to assist your majesty against insults and attacks, that may be made upon any of your majesty's dominions, though not belonging to the crown of Great-Britain, in resentment of the part your majesty has taken in a cause, wherein the interests of this kingdom are so immediately, and so essentially, concerned.

We are humbly thankful to your majesty, for your tender care, in directing the necessary augmentation of your land forces to be made in a manner the least burthensome to your people.

We assure your majesty, that your faithful commons will grant your majesty such supplies as shall be found necessary in this great conjuncture; and that we will, in all our deliberations, manifest to the world, that we have sincerely at heart the honour of our King, the support of his government, and the true interest of this country.

Paris, Nov. 7. The internal tranquillity of the kingdom being highly necessary at this juncture, his majesty has signified his desire that all disputes, which the parliament and clergy may settle.

Hague, Nov. 14. We are assured from Douay, and other places from France and French Flaners, that several persons who were interested in the late commotions in Scotland, have, within a very short time, absented themselves from their respective places of residence.

London, Nov. 18. It is said, the government will take into pay a considerable number of merchant ships for the protection of the coast.

Yesterday in the afternoon came advice, that Capt. Stevens, in his majesty's ship the Orford [of 50 Gun], fell in with the Esperance, a French man of war of 74 guns, which was going from Rochefort to Brest, and after a short engagement took her, and has sent her to Plymouth.

The officers of his majesty's ordnance have offered rewards for the discovery of fire-arms concealed in any part of Great-Britain.

The French man of war taken by the Orford, had 450 men on board, 270 of which were either killed or wounded in the engagement.

Extract of a letter from Portsmouth, Nov. 17.

Yesterday arrived at Spithead, the admirals Boscawen, Nelson, and Hobart, with the greatest part of his majesty's ships which went hence under their respective commands.

London, Nov. 22. We are informed, that a certain truly noble lord hath offered to his majesty, to raise, and maintain for a year, at his own expence, 10,000 men, for the defence of his majesty's person and government.

Yesterday the right hon. William Pitt, Esq; paymaster-general of the forces, the right hon. Henry Legge, Esq; chancellor of the exchequer, and the hon. George Grenville, Esq; treasurer of the navy, resigned their respective posts.

We hear, that the fortifications in Ireland will be soon reviewed, and put in the best posture of defence.

On Thursday last Barrington resigned his majesty's hand on being appointed secretary at war. And,

Yesterday the right hon. George Lyttelton, Esq; [Formerly to His Excellency our new Governor] resigned his majesty's hand, on being appointed chancellor of the exchequer.

The number of seamen for the year 1756, is certainly fixed at 50,000.
